The European Union and its Eastern Neighbours

Towards a more amibitious partnership?

Elena Korosteleva

Series: BASEES/Routledge Series on Russian and East European Studies

The European Neighbourhood Policy (ENP) of 2004, and the succeeding Eastern Partnership Initiative (EaP) of 2009 heralded a revolutionary new form of EU relations with its Eastern neighbours – partnership based on joint ownership and shared values, which would complement if not entirely replace the EU's traditional governance approach based on conditionality and rigid rule-transfer used for enlargement. These initiatives, however, have received a mixed response from the EU's eastern neighbours. This book, thus, explores EU partnership-building with Eastern Europe, 'sandwiched' between the EU and Russia. Based on extensive original research, including nation-wide surveys, in-depth interviews, focus groups and school essays in Belarus, Ukraine, Moldova, with the EU's and Russia's added perspectives, the book assesses why EU initiatives have been so poorly legitimised in the region. It shows the importance of 'partnership', forged through reciprocity and equivalence, rather than prescription and conditionality, for building effective and legitimate relations with neighbours; and discusses the limitations of 'external governance' for Eastern Europe.

Table of Contents

Introduction: Questioning the foundations? Chapter 1: A more ambitious partnership for neighbours? Chapter 2: The 'supremacy' of external governance? Chapter 3: EU partnership/governance in Belarus: towards policy's legitimation? Chapter 4: EU partnership/governance in Ukraine: a deadlock of ambitions? Chapter 5: EU partnership/governance in Moldova: an unrequited 'partner'? Conclusion: The importance of 'othering' in EU relations with neighbours
